

I've now been practicing medicine for over 40 years, actually, I think it might be 46 years, and my area of practice is in respiratory medicine. I trained in Western Australia at the University of Western Australia Medical School and did two years of junior clinical training in Australia, mostly at Royal Perth Hospital. I then spent three years in England studying/working at Guy's Hospital in London and also in Liverpool and in SouthEnd. I came back to Perth to work in Sir Charles Gairdner Hospital, and then went for three years to the United States of America, working at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Maryland.

I have postgraduate specialist qualifications from all of those locations.

Since returning to Perth in mid 1984 have been a practicing specialist in general respiratory medicine with special interests in occupational lung diseases as well as novel cancer treatments.
