

One of the outcomes of my work in Indonesia has been teaching, I guess, partly because I can speak Indonesian and therefore deliver my lectures in Indonesian, which doesn't matter so much in Jakarta but matters more, for example, up in Aceh, where the training courses are all done in Indonesian.

The first image is of me delivering a talk in the University in Banda Aceh, Syiah Kuala. The second image is at Persahabatan Hospital. This is a specialist lung diseases hospital, so not surprisingly, because that's my specialty, I've visited, lectured and worked there quite a bit there. One of their doctors came to Perth to work with me and complete a postgraduate degree. I have many colleagues and friends there.

The third image is of the University of Indonesia, an outstanding university, one of the top, if not the top in the whole of Indonesia, a country of 240-odd million people. That put this University at the top of the ladder. I'm proud to say that they've made me an honorary professor of that university and I've made many return visits there.

The final picture is of one of my other many university and hospital visits, that to the Airlangga University in Surabaya.

From those and other professional visits throughout Indonesia I have made lots of friendships and professional links, useful for training and collaboration.
